CVPOA forum covers the 5th's candidates

By Elizabeth Cowley

The Carmel Valley Property Owners Association (CVPOA) held a forum for the three candidates for 5th District Supervisor on February 15. The candidates, Zan Henson, Jeff Davi and Dave Potter responded to questions prepared by the CVPOA and then answered a few questions from the audience.

WHERE DO THEY STAND?

Traffic lights on C.V. Road

HENSON: "I think it's a bad idea." Henson added he would prefer an underpass at the Rancho San Carlos intersection.

POTTER: "Signalisation is the same as urbanization." Potter said a signal at the school should be considered but wouldn't endorse signals to the Village.

DAVI: "I am opposed to signals on Carmel Valley Road."

Position on Hatton Canyon

POTTER: "I don't think we can afford Hatton Canyon when we have life and safety issues in North County." Potter said Davi is incorrect in his assertion that Hatton Canyon is funded.

HENSON: "I am opposed to it." Henson would prefer an underpass.

DAVI: "Hatton Canyon is a fully funded project." Davi added that Hatton Canyon funds can't be moved to another project.

The three candidates for Sam Karas' 5th District Monterey County Supervisorial seat went on review for a tough inquiry before the Carnel Valley Property Owners Association. Spelling Bee Finals at River School

The finalists from River School in the Lyceum of Monterey County sponsored spelling bee are: Paul Bancroft, 5th grade; Alana Murphy, 4th grade; first alternates: Carly Dahl, 5th grade; and Alex Embrey, 4th grade. The final round will be held March 2, 1996 at Manzanita School, Monterey.

Water District finishes tree planting program

The Monterey Peninsula Water Management District recently completed a tree planting program along the Carmel River.

In late 1994, District was awarded a $19,800 grant from the federal Small Business Administration (SBA) to hire local businesses to grow and plant 1200 native riparian trees along the Carmel River. The SBA grant specified that all materials and labor used to grow and plant the trees must be provided by local small businesses.

The goal of the District's program was to propagate sycamore, elderberry and boxelder tree seedlings from seeds and cuttings collected from trees along the Carmel River, then plant the native seedlings in the District's river restoration areas to provide a more diverse and "natural" habitat.

The District contracted with the Native Revival Nursery in Aptos for the propagation of the boxedler and sycamore seeds, with the Elkhorn Ranch for the growing of elderberry cuttings, and with Coburn's Flower Farm in Carmel Valley for the planting.

The tree seedlings took from 7 to 12 months to sprout and grow large enough for transplanting. The trees were all planted last December at the District's Schulte Restoration Project.

Pebble Beach Concours gives $125,000

Pebble Beach Concours d'Elegance donated $125,000 to the United Way of Monterey Peninsula and the Pebble Beach Company Foundation for 1995.

The premier event of the Monterey Automotive Weekend presented each charity a check. Larry Foy, President of the United Way Board of Directors, and Mark Verbonich, President of the Pebble Beach Company Foundation, were both on hand last month at the formal check presentation to accept the donations.

The contributions were presented by Tom Oliver, President of the Pebble Beach Company and Sandra Kasky, Executive Director of the Pebble Beach Concours d'Elegance.

Both charities have a tradition of solving community problems whether they be health, morale, welfare or educational needs. These charities are important to Pebble Beach Company and the Pebble Beach Concours.

Pebble Beach Concours d'Elegance acknowledged Chrysler Corporation, Ford Motor Company, Rolls-Royce Motor Cars, Audi AG, General Motors Corporation, Meguiar's Inc., and First Interstate Bank as the 1995 event sponsors.

Valley hydrant tests

The Carmel Valley Fire Protection District announces fire hydrant flow testing will be conducted in the Carmel Valley Village area over the next several weeks. This is routine testing of the water system for the purposes of updating fire flow data, and for the purposes of checking operation and maintenance status of the water system components.

For additional information contact the Carmel Valley Fire Protection District at 659-2021.

While the office might be staffed in the future; for the near future the primary use will be for occasional use by deputies on patrol.

HENSON: "I have a novel idea .. to live within our means." Henson said area plans need to reflect fiscal reality and community concerns.

DAVI: Davi said he would hire the Rose Institute to analyze the budget and find the waste. A fund would be created from the cuts for things like road improvements.

POTTER: "There is no good news out there transportationally." Potter said we need to raise money to match Sacramento's contributions and increase lobbying. Potter added that he supports developer impact fees.

The Monterey Peninsula Water Management District (MPWMD)

DAVI: "I hope it ends very soon." Davi said he doesn't support a new agency without proper representation. Davi was later said he would create a new agency, with a new name - essentially a "P.R." move - adding that he would put caps on what it could do but retain the current election process.

POTTER: "The future for the MPWMD is slim and none." Potter said he doesn't want MPWMD functions to be assigned to the county and later added that he was not opposed to a board of appointed officials but that weighted voting would have to be incorporated.

HENSON: "I think that we need to retain local control of the allocation decisions .. I would not disband the MPWMD, I think it is idiotic to replace this board with some other board without the opportunity to vote on the people who are on that board." Henson agreed that MPWMD spending is out of control.

How should goals of conservation and reclamation be achieved and what long and short term water supply projects would you support?

DAVI: Davi said that 49 alternatives have been suggested in Cal-Am forums and that many may be viable but that dredging the existing dam was discussed and found to be too expensive at a cost of $22,000 per acre foot (AF).

HENSON: "I would start by asking; What is the need? What is the demand? We have to get that figure first and then meet it." Henson said he would revise area plans and allow residents to vote on them. After a review of community plans Henson said, "I suspect we would find that the demand is not as high as people are now projecting."

POTTER: "The mega project solution doesn't work in this community. We don't need one big quick fix but a composite of several solutions."

How would you balance the Carmel River environment with community water supply and growth needs?

HENSON: "Again, we must define need. I would meet immediate need through conservation and retrofitting and I don't think we have heard the last word about dredging. $22,000 per AF sounds expensive unless you get that AF year after year; after 10 years that AF comes down to about $220." Henson said the first thing we have to do is define a growth cap and added that we are probably close to it.

POTTER: "Where is it written in stone that we have to grow? We have to sit down and address the growth issue."

DAVI: "I agree we have to find the growth limit ...[but] we need to be realistic and realize that growth is going to occur." Davi addressed Henson and said that water need is defined, that the Peninsula currently uses 14,000 AF of water annually and that water needs to be replaced to preserve the river environment.

Flood risk and flood victim support.

POTTER: "We need to have a program in place that gets you out and gets you protected and gives you the assistance you need in the case of a flood."

DAVI: "The number one priority is public safety." Davi said that the Supervisors had a plan in 1989 but put it on the shelf for lack of $46,000 to conduct a benefit survey of Mission Fields. Davi said he would conduct the survey and allow the community to decide if they wanted to form a special benefit district.

HENSON: "I don't see how paying $46,000 for a poll is beneficial." Henson voiced concern about a special district and asked how many years taxes should be paid for what benefit. Henson added that a major flood control problem was disagreement between county agencies and said he would work to ensure that the problem does not continue. Henson told Davi he could give him a breakdown of the county budget in lieu of hiring the Rose Institute.

Comment on the county's move to contract ambulance service and how would you supply affordable ambulance service to less populated areas?

HENSON: "I think if we are incorporated county wide it is going to degrade our ambulance service." Henson said he believes in open bidding and that expensive ambulance service is one of many costs

Mello continues push to keep Methyl Bromide

Senator Henry Mello was successful in clearing the second hurdle toward the enactment of his two bills to continue use of methyl bromide. The Senate Appropriations Committee approved the bills on a vote of 7 to 4.

Mello's bills differ from other attempts at extending the methyl bromide study deadline in that they contain language requesting state regulators to consider a number of protections including field postings and barrier and buffer zone standards.

Mello stated it was his intention to take the bills up for a Senate floor vote on Friday, February 16. The current deadline for the methyl bromide studies is March 30, 1996, and while the chemical may continue to be used after that date, its sale for use in California will be prohibited without an extension of that timeline.

AS THE RIVER RUNS
Norman Spaulding

Barry Goldwater was the last significant American leader to put an honest finger on the fundamental hypocrisy that most of us want to hide in the woodshed or drop in the Mississippi and ignore.

Goldwater had a clear vision of the reality of America as a predator nation. He, like Colin Powell, knew that if you are going to war you go to win. Goldwater knew that vital commercial interests of the United States were at stake in Viet Nam, and he was not afraid to say so.

Pat Buchanan and his supporters fail in their effort to hide behind the tail of elephant isolationist posture for missing the reality that we are a nearly bankrupt nation able to maintain our lifestyle only by our bully international presence.

Well...we like to think of ourselves as a kind and gentle democracy whose sole international purpose is to uphold high democratic standards in the world.

Goldwater knew and understood that we need goods and resources from all the far reaches of the world - oil, nickel, titanium and a long list of stuff we do not have. So long as we consume 40% of the world's resources for our paltry 260 million people among the world's 4 billion, it takes force and power to enjoy our happy, wealthy lifestyle.

Never before in history has a debtor nation, like America, been able to achieve such dominance. Closing our borders and retracting our powerful military into an isolationist posture would leave this nation in absolute poverty. We tried it in the 1930s and got the great depression.

Sadly, our nation is committed to plundering all those parts of the world we can, in the name of free trade and democracy.

Like the French who colonized Viet Nam, Goldwater understood the value of direct access to the mineral and agrarian wealth at stake. Goldwater's vision got lost in the politics of the time.

We cannot be an isolationist nation and continue to enjoy the unjust share of the world's wealth we have. It is a pathetic observation that Buchanan does not seem to understand why America has military forces in Germany, Turkey, China, Korea, Philippines, Cuba and Israel.

Clinton's little peace making efforts in Haiti and Bosnia, are a tiny drop in the bucket of America's essential effort to maintain political stability in areas where we have political and economic (vital) interests.

At a point in time when America has the opportunity to achieve world dominance in both political and economic terms, the isolationists would have us surrender and bring the Army, Navy and Air Force home to defend the borders with Mexico and the Caribbean Islands.

Buchanan's isolationist appeal to keep a few blacks and browns out of America will not protect the jobs or dreams of the God-fearing people he aims to draw into his following.

Buchanan had to be told that it was not politically correct to drive foreign cars. He is the same man who has mastered all the politically correct language of racism. Yet, he has duped a following into believing the illogical, the impossible.

No, we cannot be Island America and continue to enjoy the potential for prosperity. Well...there may be a few folks who are up for five dollar a gallon gas, hundred dollar radios, back alley abortions, lower than ever wages and the rest of the world in the control of - who knows.

Yes, we need to rebuild the economic and moral fiber of America. Yes, we need to have more respect for human life. Yes, we need to secure our borders. Yes, we need to radically reduce the size of government and the taxes they demand to support our bloated government.

No...we do not need to isolate ourselves from the markets and resources Americans demand to maintain our affluent lifestyles.

WHAT'S NEXT? Mel Vercoe

Got nice replies from Senators Feinstein, Helms, McCain, Gen. Shalikashvili, and many others. Feinstein says she will consider my request to be nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize. I had suggested to Gen. Shalikashvili that it would probably be his job to try to get our people out of Bosnia if things turn sour.

Sen. McCain told me he'd opposed the deployment, but rather than withhold funds, he joined with Dole to set up guidelines and a time limit. In one year our guys are to 1) separate the warring parties; 2) equip the good guys with enough weapons to make them equal to the bad guys, and train them how to use them, so that 3) we can pull out and "peace will endure after we have gone." I have a '74 Datsun I'd like to sell for $30,000 to anybody who thinks number 3 is likely to happen in real life in Bosnia.

On a lighter note, Ross Perot, where are you? Maybe Ralph Nader? Hello. Anybody out there? Holy Toledo, what did we do to deserve our country getting into so much trouble that almost nobody wants the main steering job?

Maybe I can get used to Buchanan's hardline religion oriented views, the abortion issue, for example. His apparent intention to put some of America's needs ahead of the needs of all of the rest of the planet is the deciding factor for my support. And, if he isn't an attorney, maybe he'll lead the way in overhauling a criminal justice system that's so loaded down with handy loopholes and technicalities that we are being over-run with murders, robberies, drive-by shootings, et al. Over 25,000 murders per year, with less than 50 executions to try to discourage them is something we might expect in some foreign country where "life is cheap."

Buchanan might also get through to Congress that Presidents should not be allowed to start wars. It's bad enough that what passes for a Congress, here in America, has the power to do that.

LETTERS to the Editor

Time to go Forward With San Carlos Development

Editor, Carmel Valley Sun:

Here we go again. The same negative group of people who oppose everything in this County, the same people who contribute only criticism of our legal approval process and use up the taxpayers' money for their personal vendettas, are at it again.

This time they're trying to overturn the recent Board of Supervisors' unanimous decision on Rancho San Carlos (based on six years of research and study which comply with literally hundreds of County requirements, policies and mandates).

Now they want you to join them to oppose Rancho San Carlos - who prepared and presented a legal plan for their property, requesting the appropriate legal permits, and receiving them, from Monterey County.

Thumbs Down to People Who Did Not Speak Up

Editor, Carmel Valley Sun:

The local newspapers have reported news which is discouraging and disappointing. I'm referring to the local group which is attempting to overturn the approvals on the Santa Lucia Preserve at Rancho San Carlos.

They've said that they just want a chance for the people of Monterey County to vote on it -- but they seemed to have missed the point that the people of Monterey County effectively have voted on Rancho San Carlos, and we said "Yes".

There is a very complicated process in place in our county which takes a property owner years to complete. Once a project application is finally accepted, it is reviewed in minute detail by countless technical consultants and employees of the county. At every step along the way of this multiple-year process, the public is invited to offer input, ask questions and suggest conditions of approval.

Then our appointed and elected officials review it. (In the case of Rancho San Carlos, the county even hired independent consultants to review once more all the studies and work that had already been reviewed.)

This petition is saying that the people we elected and pay salaries to haven't done their job...and a referendum will cost we taxpayers as much as the salaries of the officials we've already paid to determine if this project complies with our county's many rules and requirements.

I encourage the people of Monterey County to support this unique and wonderful project which is, at the expense and initiative of the owners, preserving 18,000 acres of private property which is being made accessible to the public.

Don't sign a petition against Rancho San Carlos.

Tired of Negative Routine

Editor, Carmel Valley Sun:

I don't believe I've ever written a letter to the editor before in my life and I've lived on this Peninsula almost twenty years. However, there's a first time for everything.

After reading the articles in the local papers about the group of local people who want to overturn the Rancho San Carlos project, I'm saddened..and tired of the same old negative rigamarole. When does it stop?

Everyone has had a chance to become familiar with this project plan over the past five and a half years and to comment on this project in many public hearings.

Let's move on with it.

Why don't some of these people who want to fight every project work on world hunger or child abuse -- or even a bad development project that would have harmful effects on our environment? Rancho San Carlos was approved after all these years for good reasons.

State's San Carlos View

Text of a letter, dated January 22, 1996, from Roger Briggs of the California Regional Water Quality Control Board to Wanda Hickman of the Monterey County Planning and Building Department regarding the water plans for Rancho San Carlos' development:

Environmental impact report additional comments, Santa Lucia Preserve, Montery County.

Response to our comments provided in our June 29, 1995 letter for your May 19, 1995 draft Environmental Impact Report (EIR document) is inadequate and may not address impacts required for discretionary approval of water quality certification for the proposed project.

Your response did not address mitigation measures which would reduce the potential impacts to less than significant for the following water quality issues:

1. This project is not water dependent, as defined within the context of federal law. Therefore, under federal regulations (Clean Water Act Sections 401 and 404) which the Board staff must assess the project, a presumption exists of less environmentally damaging alternatives for wetlands and water course filling for residential development and golf course construction. Your document should discuss avoidance of specific wetland areas. Mitigation should require creation at a minimum of one to one ratio for all wetlands lost;

2. Mitigation of water quality impacts (specific measures) for the support and maintenance of rare, threatened and endangered species habitat as specified in the Water Quality Control Plan, Central Coast Region (Basin Plan) should be discussed, and;

3. Impact of urban pollutant runoff to downstream municipal water supplies (a beneficial use listed in the Basin Plan) is not adequately discussed.

The EIR does specify the implementation of "Best Management Practices" to reduce impacts to less than significant. However, measures are not specifically detailed, and therefore, assessment of mitigation for the reduction of impacts to water quality standards is difficult. Also, monitoring is proposed but further measures are not specified should monitoring show adverse impact. An erosion control plan and a storm water pollution prevention plan are proposed for development. However, without specific measures, we cannot determine if impacts will be adequately mitigated. Failure to provide adequate disclosure, discussion and mitigation of impacts to water quality germane to the regulatory considerations of the Regional Water Quality Control Board (including those impacts discussed in this and previous letters) may result in denial of certification of work authorized by U.S. Army Corps of Engineers permits. We recommend amendment of this document prior to certification by the County in order to avoid possible delays in permit approvals.

Who is Dwayne and More on The Goat Dairy

Editor, Carmel Valley Sun:

Who in the world is Dwayne Smith? We are to believe that he lives in Pioneer, he visits Cachagua frequently, and just happens to come off the beaten path up our private road, without knowing anyone up here, and proceeds to make profound observations of all sorts of violations that he just knows are caused by the Martins and Tegtmeiers. Ah, c'mon. Ana Cox and cronies, come out, come out wherever you are. It's disturbing to see such garbage once again printed in our local newspaper, and Dwayne Smith (or whoever held the poison pen) is just an unpleasant addition to this blown-out-of proportion situation. "Smith" uses the words "melee" and "public brawl" to describe the neighbors' legally exercising their right to oppose a commercial industry in their neighborhood. I'm imagining being challenged to a duel here. How incredibly ridiculous.

For the record, we do indeed have a

Douglas Pease

The November, 1995 issue of "Internet World" allows us to listen in on a conversation with George Gilder, who has thought greatly about where the Internet is taking us. I tried to keep up because Mr. Gilder's views apply directly to the success or failure of any high-tech company, and hence to the investment worthiness of stocks in such companies. What I deduced from the conversation may move you to seek out this article at the library, for your own interpretation.

In the '70s, a pocket calculator let us solve math problems. We entered the numbers, the calculator supplied the math functions, we got the answers and then we turned it off. In the '80s, a personal computer let us enter data for processing under whatever functions it was programmed to deliver, we got the answers, our computer stored them for us to use again, and then we turned it off. Nowadays, a network of computers makes our computer's answers available to all other computers in the network, and vice versa. Our computer now reflects the network, and the network - the Internet - is our computer. It never turns off.

Microchip technology has been increasing computer power fourfold every 18 months...for years. Interconnecting computers in a network increases capability by the square of the number of connected computers. Such power now supports more 3-mail messages than U.S. Postal Service deliveries, and more than 100 million computer users on the global Internet. This isn't just a flow of information, it is a deluge. And it is available animated, in technicolor, 3-D, and stereophonic sound...movies, tv, radio, telephone and more. Globally. Commercials and all.

Companies which try to channel this deluge into their own pipelines will prosper until the flow finds ways around them. If Microsoft continues in its attempts to monopolize the flow, the Internet will bypass the company. Companies like Netscape which grow and evolve as part of the Internet, will prosper as wide and as long as they help the flow. On the one hand, Microsoft has sought to funnel our computer operations through Microsoft operating systems and applications, while on the other hand Netscape has just arranged to deliver our personally tailored daily newspaper on our computer screensaver software. Now I understand why savvy investors ran Netscape's stock up more than 400% in a matter of months. Now I can see there are "high-tech pipeline" companies and there are "high-tech flow" companies, and one kind is more valuable than the other for very good reasons. Thank you, Mr. Gilder.

COMPUTER TALK

Val Healey

Computer-Computer Communications - Faxing.

The easiest, but not necessarily the most efficient, way to do computer-computer communications is via faxing. Each computer must have a fax software package and have its modem connected to a telephone jack. The computer that is intended to receive the fax is called the Host and when the software package is started, in Windows with the click of a button on an icon, a window opens that allows various settings to be made. The details depend on which package is being used, some being much more sophisticated, and with many more settings, than others. For the Host, the important setting is AutoReceive, which when clicked on becomes activated. There's nothing more to do at that end. If the computer is left connected in this way, it is a fax machine already set up. It will just sit and wait for faxes and put them into the Receive box from which they can be retrieved for reading at a later time.

On the sending machine the fax software is started and a Send Fax button or bar chosen. This usually opens a window from which one can select the file to be sent. After selection, and clicking on Send, a phone book opens from which one can select an existing phone number (fax number actually) or into which one can add a new number. At some point one has the opportunity of setting the resolution for the fax to be sent - typically Standard for most documents or Fine for ones with very small print. The order of these steps varies slightly from one package to another. Finally the number selected will be dialed and the fax should transmit at the lower speed of the two modems - usually either 9600 or 14400 bits/second (hope you guys have been paying attention to definitions such as a bit - and it's not a bit of @$#%&&!).

If the matter to be sent is text only, i.e. not pictures or other graphics, modem-modem file transfer is vastly more efficient than faxing. The reason lies in the way that faxes are made and sent. Suppose for argument's sake that you want to send the fax at a resolution of 200 dpi (dots per inch). The software divides the whole page by a grid of lines with each square inch having 201 lines vertically and 201 horizontally. Each square inch of this grid has 200 little blocks or "dots" each way, giving 200 x 200 - 40,000 dots. If the page is 10" high x 6" wide, it has 60 square inches x 40,000 dots/sq. inch - 2,400,000 dots to be sent. Now, in the simplest case, these dots are either black or white so that all we need is some protocol or rule that the two computer software packages agree to, and the page is scanned one line at a time, sending all the little blocks in each line with a black or white tag. The host computer places them in the same order in the Receive file. Color, or grey scales, enormously magnify the amount of date to be sent.

In the next part we will look at modem-modem file transfers and, after another couple, we will start a series for absolute beginners to the weird and wonderful world of computers.

FOR INSTANCE, IF YOU HAVE A TIGHT LIE JUST BACK OF A SCARY TRAP AND LITTLE GREEN TO WORK WITH, THE PERCENTAGES IN TRYING TO GET CLOSE ARE STRONGLY AGAINST YOU.
SO PLAY JUST TO GET ON THE GREEN SOMEWHERE, EVEN IF THAT MEANS HITTING AWAY FROM THE HOLE.

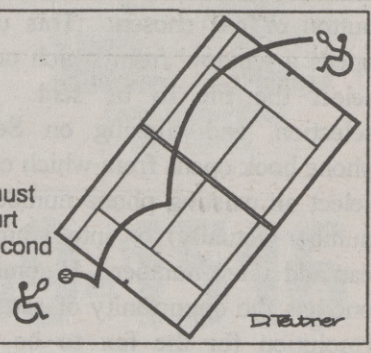
STAN SMITH'S TENNIS CLASS

BASIC RULES

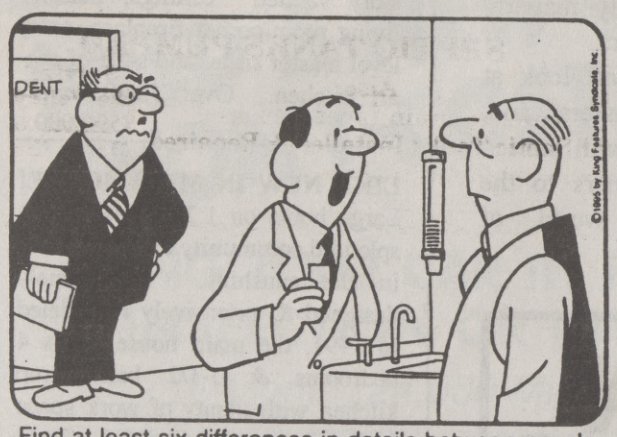
Note: In order to help all tennis players, I will cover some basic wheelchair tennis tips in the next few columns.

All normal tennis rules apply to wheelchair tennis, with one significant difference: The wheelchair player is allowed two bounces on his side of the court.

The first bounce must land inside the court boundaries; the second bounce may land anywhere.



Vision Teaser



Find at least six differences in details between panels.

Differences: 1. Glasses are removed. 2. Tie is changed. 3. Picture is added. 4. Suit is different. 5. Water spout is longer. 6. Cup dispenser is missing.

well, and also the legally required 10,000 gallons of water storage with a fire hydrant and fire hoses. There were times when our well was producing minimally and we did have to deliver water to maintain the 10,000 gallons, but I am happy to say that for the time being our tanks are full from our well's production. Adequate water to maintain a commercial dairy is a concern of ours, as such an operation is quite a water consumer. Incidentally, the Coxes have already had a fire a few years ago which they couldn't fight on their own because they had no water storage and their electrically pumped well went out.

Dwayne Smith has his work cut out for him in all of Carmel Valley if he is going to start citing shared wells and wires through trees. I do know that the power pole construction required to permanently carry that "evil" electrical wire on the Martin's property is the responsibility of and benefits a group of neighbors whom the Martins have been working with. Smith's accusation of marijuana activity is just plain ugly gossip. Actually, if one was so viciously inclined as he is, you could repeat this rumor about anyone in Cachagua, including Ana Cox and her supporters.

The situation is really quite simple. Ana Cox had a goat farm specializing in breeding. She decided she wanted to have a commercial dairy and manufacture cheese, which she did. She didn't ask the county if it was okay, she didn't ask the neighbors if it was okay, she just did it - a building here, a building there, a noisy compressor here, dump the waste there and lights everywhere. She really didn't care if her activities caused a disturbance in the neighborhood. She wanted it and, by golly, she built it. She has since been forced to file for a use permit and variance, oh, and even building permits (can you believe it?) which the wicked old county requires for such projects. The Zoning Administrator denied the use and variance, Cox appealed, then the Planning Commissioners voted 6-3 to deny. Then two of the minority vote commissioners asked Supervisor Karas to delay the vote a month and try to work this out. This changed nothing, and it looked pretty clear that the Planning Commissioners were going to go ahead and deny the project. But, hark, Ana Cox appears at this hearing with lawyer #3 and basically requests a stay of execution so she can get her two new lawyers up to snuff and try to change the law, affecting all of Monterey County, so she can have what she wants in Cachagua. Okay, the Planning Commissioners say, you have until the end of April. This is a remedy that she has every right to seek.

Personally, I think that a tremendous amount of heartache, time, energy and untold thousands of dollars would have been saved if Ana Cox had simply gone through the county process to begin with and involved her neighbors in her plans beforehand, with a concern for the impact on the neighborhood. I cannot imagine that this belated compliance has been worthwhile for her, and she has just about exhausted all of her legal avenues to have this dairy in her chosen place because it does not qualify in any way, shape or form. She tried to pull a fast one on her neighbors and the county and she seriously underestimated the consequences of her actions. It seems she is left simply with a plea for sympathy and a desire and attempt to tarnish her neighbors with alleged violations. Nice try, Ana, er - Dwayne Smith. I certainly do not consider myself to be the Violations Patrol Board of Cachagua, but when someone is infringing on others' rights of the enjoyment of their property and becomes a nuisance with no apparent regard for others in my backyard, then, yes, I will get involved. Ana Cox and her supporters have no one to blame but Ana Cox for her plight, and how dare they use fabrications to make the innocent look guilty.
